JEKALYN CARR AND DARLENE MCCOY TO APPEAR IN THE NEW 'LET THE CHURCH SAY' DOCUMENTARY FILM

[Atlanta, GA, March 12, 2022] Grammy[®] nominated gospel recording artist Jekalyn Carr (Greenleaf, Traceless) will appear in the new documentary film 'Let The Church Say' from director Rafiq J. Nabali. The feature length film also features GMA Dove nominated recording artist and radio host Darlene McCoy-Jackson (Unsung, In Sickness and in Health).

The documentary, which was filmed during the height of the pandemic, explores the question, Is the Black Church dead? The young filmmaker takes the audience on a journey through the history of the Black church and uncovers answers to critical questions surrounding the church's impact on social justice today. The film is a unique exploration of the vital connections between race, religion and activism.

Emory University professor, Reverend Dr. Teresa Fry Brown and Boston University professor Dr. Walter Fluker (The Black Church: This is Our Story, This is Our Song) share deep insights on the state of the Black church, as new organizations such as Black Lives Matter take hold of issues relevant to current society.

Darlene McCoy-Jackson's new book "And Then She Turn 50" is scheduled to be released in Fall 2022.

The filmmaker also speaks with NAACP Atlanta President Richard Rose and Spelman College professor Dr. Rosetta Ross.

The official film trailer will premiere on Sunday, March 13, 2022 on the film's official website: www.letthechurch.com

The project, which is a joint venture between Byrdie Productions and Stage Ten Media, completed post production as of January 2022. Nancy B. Howard is serving as Executive Producer and Joe Howell is the producer.
